Task 4 – Email & Etiquette

Name: A P C Srikanth Reddy
Registration Number: 25BAI10860
Course: Digital Literacy

Report Writing – Digital Communication Issue

Introduction

In today's digital world, communication mostly happens through emails, messages, and online platforms. Because of this, maintaining proper communication etiquette has become very important, especially for students interacting with professors or professionals.

Situation of Poor Communication

A common situation where poor digital communication creates problems is when a student sends an email without following proper format or etiquette. For example, a student might send an email to a professor without a subject line, greeting, or proper structure. Sometimes, the tone may also be too casual or unclear.

In such cases, the message may be ignored or misunderstood. The professor may not take the request seriously, which can lead to delays or missed opportunities for the student.

What Went Wrong

The main issue in this situation is the lack of professionalism. Missing important elements like a clear subject line, respectful greeting, and well-organized content makes the email look careless. Using informal language can also give a negative impression about the student's attitude.

How It Could Be Improved

This problem could have been avoided by following simple email etiquette rules. Writing a clear subject, using a polite tone, and structuring the email properly would make the message more effective. Even small efforts like proofreading and keeping the message concise can make a big difference.

Conclusion

Overall, proper digital communication plays a key role in academic and professional success. By following basic etiquette, students can avoid misunderstandings and create a positive impression in formal interactions.